

I am a software and hardware developer with experience in video re-mastering and cable systems. As a citizen, I currently enjoy what I consider to be fair use of digital broadcast content (e.g., time-shifting and archiving) which I pay for through cable subscription services. I object to any attempts by the FCC or Congress to limit my future exercise of these rights.

One and a half years ago I purchased a HD widescreen television which has only analog video inputs and a D-VHS recorder. I fully expect that my television will be continue to receive all high-definition broadcasts from any OTA, cable or satellite systems I may choose to view without resolution downgrades for its expected life of at least 10 years. I similarly expect that my D-VHS recorder will similarly operate without limitation in both its HD recording and playback functions.
